From: Terry Myers

Subject: Helen's the best...

A quick note to tell you how pleased we are with the great service we get from Helen. She is so on top of things, and her follow-through is impeccable. We make more changes to our policies than most people, between buying and selling things and coming and going from the U.S. to Mexico, and she is always cheerful and accommodating when we call. What a great person to have on the front lines of the business :)

Cheers,
Terri Myers

Dogs Bite Homeowner Insurance

Dog bites accounted for more than one-third of all homeowners insurance liability claims paid out in 2009, costing $412 million and up 6.4 percent from 2008, according to the Insurance Information Institute (I.I.I.). This trend is one factor causing increased rates for homeowners insurance.

WA Voters Alert

Watch for November ballot Initiative-I082

The 30 year battle to end the state monopoly of Workers Compensation insurance goes to Washington voters in Nov under I-1082. Initiative proponents say the WA system is broken and needs competition to reduce insurance rates burdening WA businesses and making them uncompetitive when trying to gain business in other states.

According to sponsor organization SAVE OUR JOBS

- Washington is one of only four states with a government monopoly that forbids private competition for industrial insurance coverage.
- While workers' comp taxes are falling around the country, Washington is one of only a handful of states increasing taxes this year. Oregon has not increased rates in 20 years – and employers there are actually experiencing rate decreases in 2010.
- Washington has the second-highest cost per employee for workers' compensation, and provides the third most generous benefit package in the nation.

Learn more at www.Am-Ins.com. See "News You Can Use" WA Voter Alert!

"Competition has really worked in Idaho" said Mike Everett, a workers compensation sales specialist at American Insurance. "I've seen first-hand how competition has lowered rates for my business clients while maintaining quality benefits for injured workers."
